And Others...

Obsessive Compulsive Disorder is an often debilitating mental illness characterized by recurrent, intrusive thoughts which cause intense anxiety. These thoughts often lead to repetitive behaviors which help to reduce the anxiety. Symptoms wax and wane but they can often interfere with a person's ability to perform daily tasks most of us take for granted.

It is estimated that 2.5% of the population suffer from OCD. Often appearing in childhood, this disorder can interfere with a child's ability to fully benefit academically in school even if they are quite bright. In its severe form, OCD can prevent a person from maintaining employment.

The Obsessive Compulsive Foundation is a not for profit organization dedicated to securing effective treatment for people with OCD. This organization supports research into the causes and treatment of OCD, education about OCD as well as patient support and informational services. The OC Foundation of Western PA is an affiliate of this group which aims to bring these programs and services to our local area.
